From the manager's desk

An open and honest look at the future of reliability and affordability

You may hear terms like rolling blackouts and energy shortages in the news. However, you may not hear us talk about that as much. That's because West Central Electric Cooperative members are part of a unique Missouri three-tier electric cooperative system designed to safeguard a reliable power supply for our members. Because of this member-owned system, all Missouri rural electric cooperatives work together to plan for member needs, and all tiers have no intention of allowing rolling blackouts or energy shortages on our system.

Here's how it works: member-consumers (you) are at the top of the system, served by West Central Electric. WCE distributes electricity to your homes, farms, and businesses. On the second tier, NW Electric Power Cooperative supplies WCE with electricity through transmission lines. This electricity is generated by the system's third tier, Associated Electric Cooperative, Inc. (AECI) based out of Springfield, Mo. Each tier of this cooperative system works to support the member-consumers (you) at the end of the line!

Rising Power Costs

Over the past several years, members have incurred several winter storms which have contributed to the reason power costs are rising. To understand how these storms are driving up power costs, let's review several terms first:

Base load is the minimum amount of electricity required on a typical day.

Peak load is the maximum amount of electricity needed during times of high demand, such as the days during a winter storm.

AECI is investing in additional electric generation plants to ensure that we have the capacity we need to serve you and avoid rolling blackouts or brownouts. However, the challenge is that electric peak loads incurred during the winter storms are rising much faster than overall electric system base load used throughout the rest of the year.

Michael Newland

Unfortunately, this investment by AECI to ensure you have electricity no matter what comes at a price. It also comes at a time when we know our members are facing rising costs everywhere you turn.

West Central Electric Base Load vs Peak Load

The WCE system is highly residential. This means our base load and peak load are greatly impacted by the weather.

In 2024, our base load was just over 64 megawatts, but our peak was just over 102 megawatts. Put another way, our electric system must be built to serve 102 megawatts, but on an average day, our members are only using 64 megawatts of electricity.

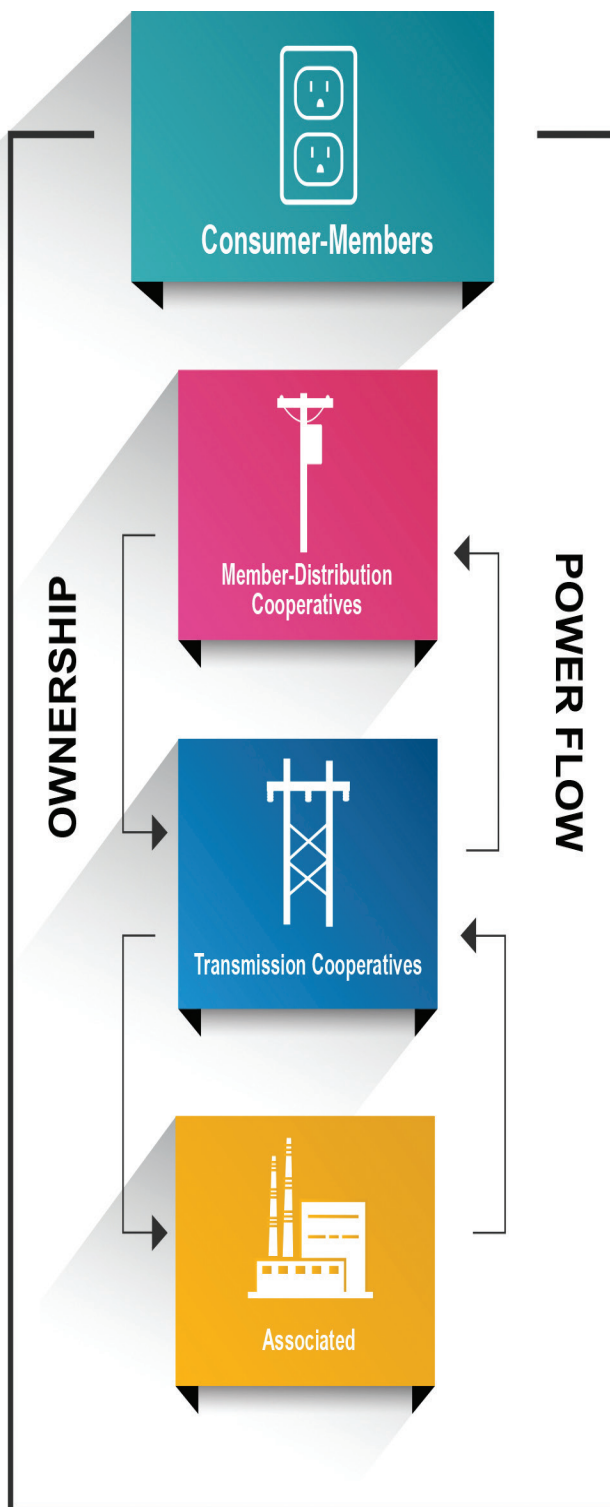

Although there is much fear in the news of energy shortages, I have comfort knowing our families, friends and businesses are supported by our three-tier system. By working together to invest for the future, we will continue to deliver our commitment to you to provide you with safe, reliable, and affordable electricity.

Sincerely,
Michael Newland, CPA
General Manager

What you need to know

Future investments throughout 3-tier electric cooperative system will help ensure reliability

Over the past few years, several areas of needed investments have been identified in order to continue to serve both current and future members and ensure reliability of the electric system. Those investments are coming in the form of additions and improvements on all levels of the three-tier cooperative system.

On the generation side, Associated Electric Cooperative is in the process of constructing two new gas generation plants near Ripley, Okla. and Turney, Mo. to support projected member load growth systemwide.

On the transmission side, NW Electric Power Cooperative is constructing a substation near the Holden power plant in the West Central Electric service territory to improve load distribution. Bringing this substation online will help WCE redistribute some of the load that is currently being handled by the Centerview Substation, according to WCE General Manager Michael Newland.

NW Electric is also working to obtain easements east of Lone Jack to construct a substation in that area.

“This is a significant investment to secure reliability and make sure that all of our members have the power they need.”

on the construction of a new substation in the Lone Jack area*

“A new substation in the Lone Jack area is needed to serve the growing western part of our service territory and ensure reliability for our members and our future members in that area,” Newland said.

On the distribution side, WCE will be responsible for building distribution lines from these substations to the existing system, and upgrading many of the lines.

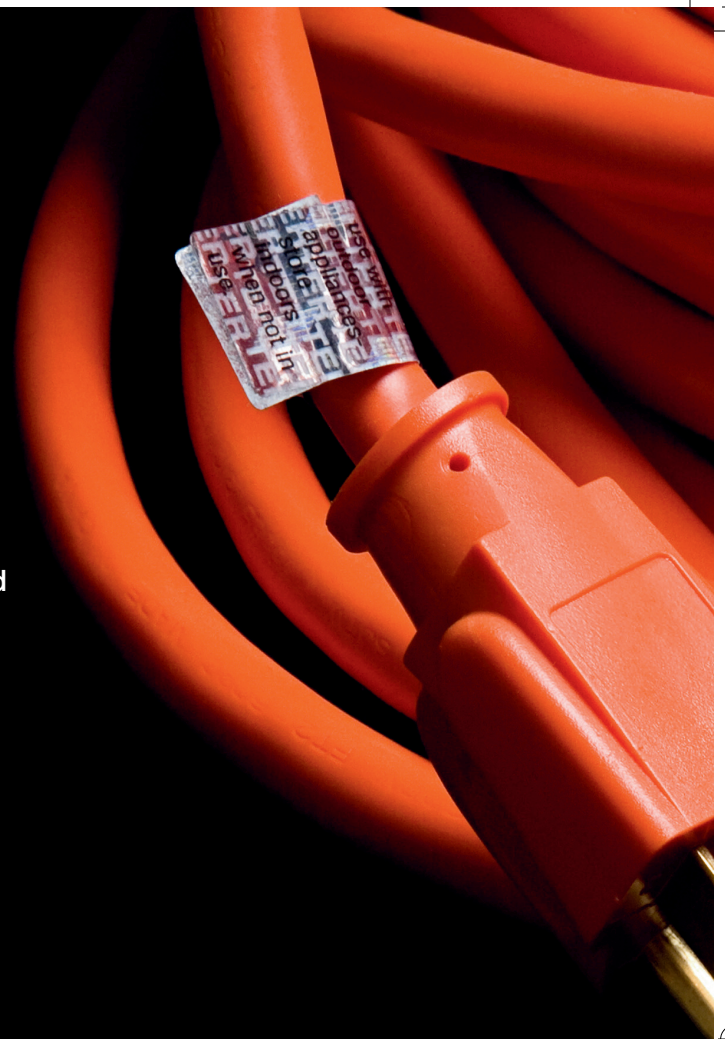

“This is a significant investment to secure reliability and make sure that all of our members have the power they need,” Newland said.

These projects are being added to an already diversified system designed for solid reliability. Currently, AECI’s power generation includes two coal-based plants, three combined-cycle natural gas plants and three gas peaking plants, one of which is the Holden Power Plant. In addition, contracted generation includes hydropower as well as wind power generated at six wind farms throughout Missouri, one in Kansas and one in northeastern Oklahoma.

In short, Missouri’s electric cooperative system is built to ensure that on the harshest days of winter or the days of blistering summer heat, members have the electricity they count on.

Extension Cord Safety: The Socket

- Make sure there is a tight connection between the appliance and the extension cord. Similar to an outlet, you don't want a loose connection between the device plug and the extension socket as it raises the chance of an electric shock or fire.
- Check the wattage rating of the appliance and compare it to the extension cord. Most devices have a wattage label on the product or instruction manual. You can also use an electricity usage monitor. Check this label to make sure you aren't trying to push more power through the cord than it's rated to handle.
- Never connect multiple extension cords. Connecting multiple extension cords increases the likelihood of equipment failure, fire and electric shock. Only use a cable that is long enough to complete the task.
- Plug extension cords into GFCI outlets, especially when working outdoors. You want to make sure the appliance you are using is grounded.

Extension Cord Safety: The Cable

- Make sure to check the cable of the extension cord to make sure it's ready to power your appliance of choice.
- Always ensure your extension cord is free of damage. Holes, frays, exposed wire or melted insulation are all signs that you should replace your cord. It's tempting to cover up these spots with tape and move on, but the cable can still be hazardous, even if the damage is covered.
- Don't hide cords under rugs or furniture. Extension cords need to dissipate heat to operate properly. When they are completely covered, they can't cool down, creating a fire hazard.
- Make sure extension cords are easy to see. Avoid placing extension cords in high-traffic areas. If you need to place a cord in a well-traveled space, make the cord as visible as possible. Illuminate the area, use a brightly colored extension cord and place signage to notify people of the tripping hazard.
- Avoid running cords through snow or standing water. Even if the cable is rated for outdoor use, you should never run the cord through a body of water. This placement can result in an electric shock hazard.
- Don't nail or staple cords to keep them out of the way. Nails and staples can tear through insulation and expose the extension cord's wires.
- Loosely wrap the cord when you are finished using it and store it inside. This storage method will reduce kinks and extend the longevity of your extension cord.
- Ensure all appliances and cables are reviewed and approved by an independent testing organization, such as Underwriters Laboratories (UL).

Extension Cord Safety

Extension Cord Safety: The Plug and Outlet

- You want to have a safe, grounded connection without room for hazards. To do this, you need to be certain that the plug and outlet are in proper condition for use.
- Don't unplug an extension cord with the cable. A quick jerk of the plug can damage the cord or the wall outlet. Plug and unplug the extension cord with the case of the plug.
- NEVER remove the grounding pin from an extension cord to make it fit into a two-pronged outlet. The grounding pin protects you from electric shock. Removal of the pin can result in electric shock or fire.
- Unplug extension cords when you complete your task. Unplugging extension cords reduces the amount of wear-and-tear on the plug and the outlet over time.
- Consider adding more wall outlets to your home or workplace. If you rely on extension cords to accomplish tasks or work indoors, you may need to add more outlets to power your devices. Extension cords shouldn't function as permanent fixtures.
- Plug extension cords into GFCI outlets, especially when working outdoors. You want to make sure the appliance you are using is grounded.

CYCLE builds young leaders

"If you want to hear some really good advice you need to listen to the speakers. They have so much knowledge and advice to share about life that can help you in the future," CYCLE delegate Kegan Walsh said.

For four days in July, Jefferson City was home to some of the best and brightest students Missouri has to offer. The event was the Cooperative Youth Conference and Leadership Experience sponsored by the Association of Missouri Electric Cooperatives, and attended by high school juniors and seniors from across the state chosen to represent their local cooperatives.

West Central Electric Cooperative's representatives were Crest Ridge High School seniors Savanna Bramwell, Landen Nelson and Kegan Walsh, who earned their place during the 2025 Youth Tour and CYCLE competition held this spring.

The goal of CYCLE is to be a leadership development stepping stone for youth. By cooperatives getting involved in helping develop their leadership potential, the hope is for delegates to go back to their communities and continue to learn from local leaders, educators and co-op staff. When they get into positions of leadership later in life, they will then be inclined to remember the cooperatives' way of thinking.

Delegates participate in leadership activities, cooperative education and hands-on government. While the conference is short, CYCLE is jam-packed with activity from the team-building exercise "Build a Cooperative" game, and a visit to the Missouri State Penitentiary, to a day trip to St. Louis and time at the state Capitol Building debating a bill they authored.

Motivational sessions with guest speakers include Dan Meers, (KC Wolf) and the Rachel's Challenge group, which shows students how they can start a chain reaction of compassion in their own communities.

For more information about the Youth Tour and CYCLE contest, contact Heather Hoflander at 800-491-3803 or heather@wcecoop.com.
